

A Meaningful Gift for Your Young Adults

Many of you will have the pleasure of visits from your college age children during this holiday season. Do you realize that once they have turned 18, you do not have access to their medical information unless official documents have been signed?

We hope it will never happen, but if your young adult is really sick or hospitalized because of a car accident, you, the parents, are not authorized to talk to the doctors or nurses about your child's medical condition.

Often, the doctors or nurses will give you general information. But you won't get any information in case of medical malpractice or when important decisions need to be made, or if your son/daughter does not or cannot communicate his or her wishes.

The solution is to have your young adult executing advance medical directives and a HIPAA Release.

This holiday season, have that conversation about advance directives with your young adults. Then follow-up with the right legal documents, which our firm can supply.

This is such an important issue that we are offering a student/college package of the appropriate advance directive documents at a reduced rate.

No one wants to think about their loved ones becoming incapacitated. However, with the opportunity of holiday visits, encouraging your young adult to complete their advance directives could be the best present a parent can give. When the holidays are over, you will both have peace of mind.

Feel free to contact my office and we will be happy to help you get started on this important issue.

Sincerely,
Yahne

For more estate planning, special needs, and elder care information:

Like us on Facebook

View our profile on LinkedIn

